1. BACKGROUND

In the realm of governance and public accountability, transparency stands as a cornerstone principle, essential for fostering trust, enabling citizen participation, and ensuring effective decision-making. Embedded within this ethos is the Right to Information Act (RTI), a legislative tool designed to empower citizens by granting them access to information held by public authorities. Amidst this landscape of transparency and accountability, the Transparency Audit of Disclosures under Section 4 of the Right to Information Act by Public Authorities, A Report Submitted to Central Information Commission New Delhi in November 2018, by A.N. Tiwari & M.M. Ansari, emerges as a seminal work. The Transparency Audit of Disclosures under Section 4 of the Right to Information Act by Public Authorities delves into the critical assessment of governmental adherence to Section 4 mandates of the RTI Act. This section mandates proactive disclosure of information by public authorities to facilitate greater transparency and reduce the need for citizens to file formal RTI requests.

Against the backdrop of India's evolving democratic framework and the imperative for governmental transparency, the Indira Gandhi National Open University (IGNOU) sets the stage for a comprehensive exploration of the RTI Act's implementation and efficacy. As an institution committed to open learning and inclusive education, IGNOU exemplifies the values of accessibility and dissemination of knowledge, making it a fitting platform for examining the intricacies of information disclosure and accountability within public authorities.
